

The text you've provided is an analysis of how President Trump and his administration are politicizing the military during their term in office. The author discusses various issues such as:

1. Domestic deployments of the military without a clear legal basis or justification.
2. The use of military force against suspected drug smugglers, which may have been an extrajudicial killing and a potential war crime.
3. The administration's attempts to turn the armed forces into a MAGA (Make America Great Again) militia by purging honest and independent officials who might disagree with them.
4. The impact of this politicization on public confidence in the nation's armed forces, potentially setting off a chain reaction that will damage the military long after Trump leaves office.
5. The need for senior officers to express their doubts about questionable orders and seek appropriate venues to voice their concerns, such as congressional testimony or media interviews.
6. The importance of adhering to core principles and best practices in civil-military relations, including civilian control of the military within a constitutional framework under the rule of law.

In conclusion, the author argues that the Trump administration's actions are undermining the rule of law, democracy, and trust in the American military. They are pushing the military towards becoming a political tool instead of an apolitical institution dedicated to defending the Constitution. This politicization could have long-lasting effects on the armed forces and the nation as a whole.
